Skw'une-was Indigenous Cultural Immersion Program

We invite you and your students to experience Skw'une-was, an authentic two-day indigenous cultural immersion program developed together with Skwxwú7mesh (Squamish) Elders. The learning journey begins with an interpretive walk along the Ch'iyákmesh (Cheakamus) River. Arriving at the Coast Salish longhouse, students are welcomed with a traditional naming ceremony and then grouped into family activities as plant gatherers, wood and cedar bark workers, wool weavers, fishers and hunters.

This award-winning program is designed to meet a range of curricular connections for students in grades 3 to 4 and is aligned with the First Peoples Principles of Learning.

Program Highlights

- Living in and around an authentic Coast Salish longhouse with the Ch'iyákmesh people of Skwxwú7mesh Nation
- Learning Skwxwú7mesh Nation language, legends, crafts, food gathering, fishing and hunting techniques
- Experiencing a traditional naming ceremony, cooking with hot rocks, singing and drumming
- In this participation model program, school staff and chaperones enjoy a half-day training session at the longhouse prior to the program

nature is in session

A short interpretive forest walk brings you to the longhouse, nestled along the Ch'iyákmesh River, a Skwxwú7mesh word meaning people of the “fish weir”. Your class is welcomed with ceremonial song and drumming and students participate in traditional daily life of the Coast Salish people.

As part of community living at the longhouse, students prepare all meals together with parent volunteer elders, using traditional techniques including cooking with hot rocks and making bannock over the fire. In the afternoon, a cultural staff engages students with legends, traditional games, singing or drumming. A guided forest night walk completes a memorable first day, before students settle into the longhouse for the night. The Skw'unc-was program is a unique experience of sharing the beauty, depth and vibrancy of Skwxwú7mesh First Nation culture in fun, interactive and engaging ways, that your students will remember forever.
